

Letter From The Editor:

Artists through the ages have used many media to express their appreciation of avian life. In recent years, contemporary wildfowl sculptors have taken the craft of decoy making to a new level of artistic achievement. From the simple lines of an antique decoy to the ultra-realistic, feather-perfect rendering of today's painted wooden birds, wildfowl carving has become an art that attracts collectors.

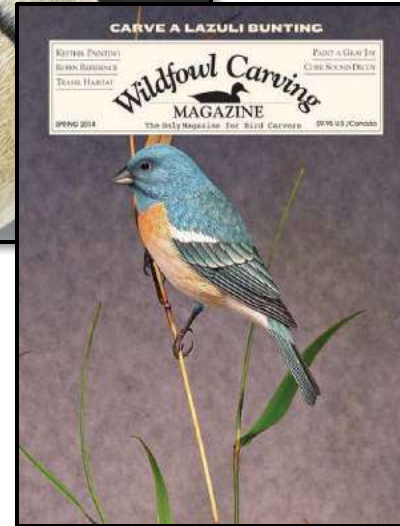

Through its unique format, WILDFOWL CARVING MAGAZINE has helped this emerging art form grow. We are the only magazine for bird carvers. Within the pages of this quarterly magazine, leaders in the field share the secrets for burning, texturing, and painting. Our readers learn all the latest techniques and see the best reference material available. Readers turn to us for start-to-finish projects, fascinating interviews, and informative articles from how to design an effective carving to how to safely ship your work.

Our annual COMPETITION publication showcases the top work from carving shows around the country and Canada. Through stunning photography and on-site reports, COMPETITION keeps the carving and collecting communities informed about what the best carvers in the world produced over the past year to compete in judged events. We also include complete results from the biggest shows.

As the recognized leader in the field, we take pride in providing a forum for artists to push wildfowl carving to new heights.
